Stimulated by the flattering eulogistic and unqualified approbation of the reading community, and the assurance of the friends of the cause, the publishers of the American Traveller have determined to withhold no efforts to make the paper more interesting and useful, and to justify to deserve the high estimation with which its labors have achieved, but to incite to exertions to make it more useful, and to still water public opinion as shall the American Traveller be able to avail among its contemporaries. The liberality with which a discriminating public has heretofore received the paper, has afforded the publishers no reason on the part of the proprietors, that any more of their endeavors to edify and entertain the readers of the paper, should be met with a corresponding decrease of the already extensive circulation of the
